FOUR ARRESTED MONDAY BAIL BOND TO BE SET FRI.

Four persons, three men and one woman, from Memphis were picked up and arrested late Monday afternoon at Marshall by state trooper George Treat. They were identified by Stone county sheriff Dexter Brewer as Barbara Smith, Wayne Shear, Charles Franks and J. R. Bumpos.

Sheriff Brewer gave this account of the incident. Brewer said he had a complaint on Charles Franks. He said he knew Franks went through Fifty-Six about four o'clock Monday afternoon going toward Big Flat. The sheriff said he called the Searcy county sheriff and asked him to set up a road block to stop the car Franks was riding in.

According to Brewer the road block was effective and Franks was picked up immediately after the call. Sheriff Brewer and state trooper John Haynes of Mountain View went to Marshall to bring Franks back.

All four were jailed in the Mountain View jail late Monday. The three men have been charged with forgery and uttering, and the girl was charged as an accessory to the fact.

Sheriff Brewer said the men passed three checks in this county. He said the checks were written on the Robertson State company. One check, Brewer said, was cashed at Dobbins Store at Allison. The other two were passed to the A. J. Balentine store and the Robert Woody store in Fifty-Six, the sheriff said.

The sheriff said all four were wanted in Jackson county and Poinsett county for the same charge. Franks was wanted here for failure to pay a fine on a whiskey charge last year, the sheriff said.

Sheriff Brewer also said one of the men, J. R. Bumpos, was absent without leave from the armed forces. He said Bumpos had been using the name Bobby Woodson.

No amount of bail bond has been set, however, the sheriff said it would be set Friday, May 25.

Where I was - What I saw during the War

By E. C. Beckham, Sergeant, Company "K" 21st Arkansas

There was a man with us who we called "Quantrell". I don't know his real name, but he claimed to belong to Charles Quantrell's gang. He was a regular hyena, and if there is anything worse, he was that too. He was always into some meanness. He went into the "calf pen," but as soon as they found it out he was sent back, but right away he was back again.

Every day he went in and often they sent him out; and after they closed the gate he scratched under. Then they put a ball and chain on him, but next morning he was in again with his ball and chain on. Then they marched him out and tied him up by the thumbs for two hours, and told him if they caught him in there again, they would kill him. I heard him tell the sergeant while he was marching him out to tie him up that he belonged to Quantrell's band. He said: "I just dare you to kill me. I am Quantrell's right bower, and if you kill me he will kill five hundred Federal soldiers in retaliation. I would not, when I get out of prison, show one of those fellows in the calf pen any more quarters than I would a damned wild-cat. He was so bad that the prisoners wanting to get rid of him wrote to Col. Carrier to take him out. He wrote back that he did not want him, and that if the prisoners would not put up with him to kill him; but he was there when I left.

We were not allowed to have newspapers of late dates, but we managed to get them just the same. I don't know how, but Billy Boyce of St. Louis got a paper nearly every day and while Price was on his raid we heard from him every day. While he was coming toward us we were in hopes he would come after us; and if he had come within hearing we intended to try to go to him, and if we had he would have gotten between eight and ten thousand as good soldiers as he ever commanded.

There was an arsenal on the island, which was not very strongly guarded. Our first dash would have been for the arsenal and the nest for Price. If the river had not been in the way I expect we would have tried it anyway. There was considerable excitement in the prison while Price was in Missouri, but when he left it all died down. I believe I have told all I can remember about Rock Island prison that is of interest.

On the 15th of January, 1865, we were informed that a part of us would start soon for exchange. Our sergeant told us that all us who were captured by Gen. Steele in Arkansas to be ready and as that included me, I was ready right then. So on the 16th we were called, 269 of us, and marched out of the prison over to the city of Rock Island and placed in an empty barrack, which was very cold and damp. So there we were, 269 of us, in one room 100 feet long without fire, nearly naked, and not a blanket to the man. As cold and weak as we were I did not think it possible for one man in the crowd to survive that night but we did. We went around in a circle in a trot or walk all night to keep from freezing. The room was very tight and we were so closely crowded and buoyed up with the hope of going south that we lived through the night which will, no doubt be remembered as long as there is one of that squad alive. Not a single man laid down or even sat down during the entire night. If we had stopped I do not believe there would have been a live man in the house in two hours.

On the 17th at 8 o'clock we were placed on board the train and went down the Illinois Central railroad, lay over that night at Springfield; next day we went to Cairo, a distance of about five hundred miles from Rock Island, stayed on the train till morning, when we were placed in a house and guarded until the boat was ready to sail. On the 21st we were placed on the hurricane deck of an old Mississippi steamer, where the wind had a fair show at our almost naked bodies. On the morning of the 22nd we set sail down the great Mississippi, the weather very cold and the wind blowing as though it was determined to freeze every one of us to death, and seven men were frozen before we reached New Orleans. It snowed on us every day we were on the boat.

We landed at New Orleans on the morning of the 28th. On our way down, just below Baton Rouge, we were fired upon by a squad of Rebels, but nobody was hit. It was just at dusk and nobody could be seen. Several of the bullets hit the boat, one or two in the pilot house. Our boat was near the shore when she was fired into, but soon started for the opposite bank, and as there were no guns larger than enfields playing on us, we were soon out of reach.

On the 27th we landed in New Orleans and were marched down the river, a distance of about four miles to the steam compress. At the time we got there it was snowing very fast, which was the first and only snow they had there that winter. Next morning the sun rose bright and clear, which was the first time I had seen the sun since we left Rock Island. The 28th was a clear, warm day, and we all got warm for the first time that winter.

The smallpox soon broke out among us and some of the men suffered greatly with it, and one old man, I have forgotten his name, died after we left there. Hiram Treat had it and I waited on him for a week or more. We left him there and he finally got well.

While we were confined at New Orleans our rations were cooked before being issued to us. Our rations consisted of crackers or "hard tack", as the boys called them, and pickled pork or beef, which was boiled in large pots, there being a room on the west side of our prison used for that purpose. Some of the boys who were there will doubtless remember how we managed to steal the grease from the negro cooks, which they skimmed off the meat while it was cooking and which they kept for their own use or to sell. There was a barrel nearly full of this lard just inside the cook room, and at the end opposite the barrel was a small hole through which we could see what was inside. The guards would not let us into the house except at the end, so after dark when the cooks were gone, we crept up to the hole, armed with a tin cup tied to a stick, and dipped it into the lard; but that was a slow process. There was a trough about eight inches deep and a foot wide that was let down into the ground to convey the slop from the cook room outside the prison, and was so nearly level that the slop stood in it from three to four inches deep all the time.

There was a small man with us whom we hired to crawl in and get lard, but he got scared after he got in and did not get much of the lard. There was a very slim, long man, I believe his name was Roberts or Robertson, who said he would try to crawl in through the trough. So one night he stripped himself of all his outward wearing apparel, got down in the trough with two or three of us to help him, in he went, and you bet he got lard.

On the morning of the 20th of February, 1865, we were called to the gate, formed in line and marched in order back up the river to a steamer that lay ready to carry us back up the Mississippi to the mouth of Big Red River, where we landed the 21st. There we met a Confederate States boat loaded with United States prisoners. So here under flags of truce, United States and Confederate States brass bands stood facing each other, not more than twenty yards apart, and played alternately, first one then the other. The Confederate States band played "Yankee Doodle", then the United States band played "Dixie", and then they played together.

Monday Morning, May 21st. By the old calendar on the wall I see that the American Red Cross was formed 81 years ago today. By the meddling and interference from the various sources we now have the double cross instead.

I heard last week that Hubert Kendrick had said that we would have 60 more days of this dry weather and that it would be hotter than . . . during that time. From the weather reports over the country and from the looks of the elements Hubert might be right once for a change.

The Strayer family from Sunnyside community visited the Willis tribe last Wednesday.

Sgt Ray Willis and family have a few more days at home yet before reporting back for duty in Arizona in Air Force.

The decoration and memorial service at Freedom Cemetery was well attended yesterday afternoon. There were several from other communities in attendance.

It is with sincere regret that I note the many deaths of people in the range of my acquaintance in the past few days.

W. M. Brewer, Johnny Gilbert, Mrs. Minnie Bell Taylor, and George W. Lackey. I have known or known of all these people for some time. Some of them I have known many years and it is with regret that I realize that they are gone from our midst and that we will not be able to see them on this earth again. To their relatives and many friends I would say that all four of these people have lived an average life span and that they have been blessed with a reasonable degree of health and prosperity in their sojourn on this earth and that if they could have lived a hundred years longer we would not have been any more ready to give them up than we were at this time. My sincere sympathy is extended to each relative of these people in their time of sorrow and grief.

I hope I can have something new on politics next week and maybe something on woods ticks as well. There has not been any of the Kennedy, Roosevelt or Rockefeller families visiting on the mountain since last week that I have heard of.
