Michael O'Neill, J. August Richards and Clive Standen (from left) star in "Council of Dads," premiering Tuesday on NBC.

NBC's 'Council of Dads' pulls together for an ill friend's family

BY JAY BOBBIN

Some friends promise to be there for you and yours when times get tough. And then, there's the "Council of Dads."

Premiering Tuesday, March 24 (and then resuming on April 30), the NBC drama unites several close friends of a cancer patient (Tom Everett Scott) to support the man's family. Played by Clive Standen ("Vikings"), J. August Richards ("Angel") and Michael O'Neill ("The West Wing"), the "council" checks in regularly – while also trying to keep their own lives in check – on those including the matriarch (Sarah Wayne Callies, "The Walking Dead") who's expecting another child.

Inspired by Bruce Feiler's same-named book, "Council of Dads" is a departure for executive producer Jerry Bruckheimer, traditionally a crime-show specialist ("CSI: Crime Scene Investigation," "Without a Trace"). "It's an immediate idea that I think that we've all dealt with," maintains Tony Phelan, also an executive producer of the new series along with his wife and creative partner, Joan Rater. "We have very similar conversations where she will say to me, 'If I die, these are the approved women that you can have come anywhere near our children.'"

Co-star O'Neill allows that in some ways, "Council of Dads" echoes "This Is Us," the fourth-season finale of which it debuts immediately after. "I think there was an appetite there for that drama," he reflects, "and I think they just pulled the covers back and said, 'Here you are.' I love that they were the prow of the ship, and I'm very happy to go into harbor behind them – but that appetite has been there for us as well, I think, so we'll just try to honor it."

Callies notes that her father-in-law succumbed to cancer "between shooting the pilot and the series, which was an interesting kind of thing to navigate. I think we've all had the experience of recognizing that your family and your blood ... are not the same thing, by any means. They're the people who stand up for you, right? They're the people who say, 'I'm going to make you feel safe in the world. And I'm going to make myself a better person because you deserve that from me.' That's family, I think."

Indeed, Richards says "the message" that "Council of Dads" conveys "really hits me in a place where I live, which is that family is not limited to race, sexual orientation, not even genetics. Your capacity to love is what makes your family. I was so moved by that, I just was like, 'If I could be a part of this show that is part of something that I would really love to say to the world, then I would be blessed.' And I am."

Harrison Ford's Top 10 Movies

BY JAY BOBBIN

"Morning Glory" (2010): With seemingly minimal effort, Ford is absolutely hilarious as a veteran television newsman who growls his resistance over becoming a morning show co-anchor.

"Air Force One" (1997): Ford looks presidential but plays tough as the United States' chief executive fights terrorists who hijacked his airplane.

"The Fugitive" (1993): Displaying just the right amount of desperation, Ford assumes David Janssen's iconic television role as Richard Kimble, the doctor on the run after being wrongly accused of killing his wife.

"Patriot Games" (1992): Following Alec Baldwin ("The Hunt for Red October") in the part, Ford redefines the role of CIA analyst Jack Ryan in his first of two adventures based on the Tom Clancy espionage novels.

"Presumed Innocent" (1990): Ford underplays ideally as an attorney accused of killing a colleague with whom he had an extramarital affair.

"Working Girl" (1988): Light comedy suits Ford well in this Mike Nichols-directed treat, casting him a merger specialist who helps a secretary posing as her temporarily incapacitated boss.

"Witness" (1985): Many moviegoers came to understand the Amish via this drama, with Ford as a police detective hiding from corrupt peers.

"Blade Runner" (1982): With his dour, cynical attitude as Replicant-chasing cop Rick Deckard, Ford does much to inform director Ridley Scott's bleak view of the future.

"Raiders of the Lost Ark" (1981): With bullwhip in hand, Ford made Indiana Jones an instant icon.

"Star Wars" (1977): Ford blasted off into stardom as reluctant hero Han Solo in the saga's first fantasy, later rechristened the fourth chapter.

Harrison Ford stars alongside his CGI companion in "The Call of the Wild"

MOVIE REVIEW

Harrison Ford answers 'The Call of the Wild'

BY JAY BOBBIN

One of the most enjoyable things about Harrison Ford these days is to watch him act his age. Literally.

Beyond the latest "Star Wars" movies, such films as "Morning Glory" and "The Age of Adaline" have demanded that he depict his own stage of life and career. He does that again with a project that's a rather ideal match on that count: "The Call of the Wild," the classic Jack London story that services Ford better than his canine co-star ... who isn't actually a real dog.

The animal named Buck actually is computer-generated in this case, which is a bit of an odd choice, given how many trainers there are in the entertainment industry who handle exactly this kind of thing. Admittedly, this would take a pretty obedient and trainable dog, since much of the action falls on Buck as he goes through encounters with various humans.

Though other familiar faces turn up in the cast (Dan Stevens, Karen Gillan, Bradley Whitford), by far, the most memorable association is Buck's adventure with Ford as a prospector haunted by family troubles. The pain conveyed by the screen veteran is quite human, neatly balancing an acting partner who's not only not human, but not real.

Anyone who knows "The Call of the Wild" – and that includes lots of youngsters who read it as a class assignment – knows its basic themes of individualism, isolation and survival. The saga has serviced a number of film versions over the better part of the past century, but this is the first one to rely on CGI to create its animal hero.

Certainly, such imagery is nothing rare these days; in fact it's almost more rare to find a movie without it. Still, that technical expertise often is applied to fantasies, not something with the overall realism of "The Call of the Wild," so it's mildly off-putting to realize that Buck is not an actual living being in this case.

Ford certainly has acted opposite such creations before (need we mention again that franchise that had him steering the Millenium Falcon?), and the fact that he remains so down-to-earth here is a huge tribute to his technique and his reliable nature.

"The Call of the Wild" also is a tale built for atmosphere, and the picture is very lucky to have the brilliant Oscar winner Janusz Kaminski – who works frequently with Steven Spielberg – as its cinematographer. Thanks largely to him, the result has an expectedly handsome look that a classic saga like this deserves. That, and a smart and skilled star, are the main reasons to pay a call to this movie.

Beyond the latest “Star Wars” movies, such films as “Morning Glory” and “The Age of Adaline” have demanded that he depict his own stage of life and career. He does that again with a project that’s a rather ideal match on that count: “The Call of the Wild,” the classic Jack London story that services Ford better than his canine co-star ... who isn’t actually a real dog.

Director and co-writer Sam Mendes (“American Beauty,” “Skyfall”) earned wide acclaim and many award nominations for this World War I drama, based largely on his own grandfather’s memories of the battle. It traces the efforts of two young British soldiers (played by George MacKay and Dean-Charles Chapman) who literally risk their lives to deliver an important message calling off a planned attack on German forces ... an event that would place the brother of one of the soldiers in jeopardy, though the messengers face a bounty of peril themselves. Of the film’s 10 recent Oscar bids, it won the honors for cinematography (a superb job by returning Mendes collaborator Roger Deakins, who accomplishes much of the picture with continuous long takes), visual effects and sound mixing. Among familiar actors backing the central stars are Colin Firth, Benedict Cumberbatch, Andrew Scott (“Fleabag”), Mark Strong and Richard Madden. »»» (R: AS, P, V) (Also on Blu-ray and 4K Ultra HD)

“The Grudge”

After two earlier versions – the original Japanese film and an American remake – this horror tale gets another workout, this time from writer-director Nicolas Pesce. The basics remain the same as several stories collide, with detectives (Andrea Riseborough, Demian Bichir, William Sadler) investigating a family murder-suicide case that may have supernatural undercurrents. No major character here goes unaffected by ghosts, adding to the levels of eeriness and surprise as unpredictable events continue to unfold at a house where tragedy has occurred. John Cho,

Betty Gilpin (“GLOW”), Jacki Weaver (“Silver Linings Playbook”), Frankie Faison and genre veteran Lin Shaye also are in the cast of the expectedly unsettling project. »»» (R: AS, P, V) (Also on Blu-ray and On Demand)

“Treadstone: Season One”

The “Bourne” espionage series lives on – without Jason Bourne – in this USA Network series that advances elements of the Robert Ludlum novels and the movies made from them. The show involves some producers of the “Bourne” movies, who maintain the premise’s international scope, and focuses on other operatives of the highly secretive CIA initiative in Bourne’s background. Jeremy Irvine (“War Horse”) and Brian J. Smith (“Sense8”) are among the stars of the saga of sleeper agents awakened around the world to tackle the missions they were programmed for. Developed by Tim Kring, the creator of “Heroes” and “Crossing Jordan,” the adventure-drama also features Omar Metwally (“The Affair”) as a CIA veteran whose troubled past makes him an ideal point person for the so-called Operation Treadstone, Tracy Ifeachor (“Quantico”) as a reporter who restarts her career by pursuing the Treadstone story, and Michelle Forbes (“Homicide: Life on the Street”) and Michael Gaston (“The Man in the High Castle”) as other CIA officials. »»» (Not rated: AS, P, V)

“Frankenstein: The True Story”

One of the very best retellings of author Mary Shelley’s horror classic about a doctor obsessed with creating a synthetic man from others’ body parts, this made-for-NBC 1973 miniseries debuts on Blu-ray and boasts excellent performances by Leonard Whiting (“Romeo and Juliet”) as Dr. Victor Frankenstein and Michael Sarrazin as his creation. With a hugely literate script by novelist Christopher Isherwood and Don Bachardy, the production also gave audiences another look at Jane Seymour shortly following her international splash as a “Bond girl” in “Live and Let Die.” James Mason, Agnes Moorehead. David McCallum, Nicola Pagett, John Gielgud, Ralph Richardson, Margaret Leighton and Michael Wilding also add acting heft to the British-American co-production. Special features include interviews with Seymour and Whiting. »»» (Not rated: AS, V)

“CUNNINGHAM”

One of the icons of the dance world is profiled in this documentary, recalling the rise of Merce Cunningham as one of the most innovative choreographers in his field. Starting out as a dancer himself in New York in the years after World War II, he had ideas and incentives to strike out as someone who put together his own steps that others followed – and quite successfully and enduringly, earning him such accolades as the Kennedy Center Honors and a National Medal of Arts. By the time of his death at age 90, Cunningham had devised more than 200 pieces (many of which expectedly are excerpted here) for the dance company that bore his name. This film originally was shown in 3-D in theaters. DVD extra: “making-of” documentary. »»» (PG: AS)

“The Song Of Names”

Tim Roth and Clive Owen make an expectedly powerful acting match in this drama built heavily on music. They play brothers-by-adoption during their World War II-era boyhood, suddenly severed when they become young adults and the adopted sibling (Owen) – who’s a remarkable violin prodigy – vanishes. Many years later, the other brother hears a familiar-sounding musician who could provide clues to the long-missing man’s whereabouts. Veteran composer Howard Shore (“The Lord of the Rings”) devised the score, obviously a pivotal element of director Francois Girard’s film. Catherine McCormack (“Braveheart”), Saul Rubinek and Eddie Izzard also appear. DVD extras: two “making-of” documentaries. »»» (PG-13: AS, P)
