The Summer Scene

May 9 - May 15, 2020

BY GEORGE DICKIE

Who knew the emperor of Russia was such an insolent brat?

So selfish, immature and cruel are the ways of 18th century monarch Peter (Nicholas Hoult, "The Favourite") that in the anti-historical comedy series "The Great," premiering Friday, May 15, on Hulu, his new bride Catherine (Elle Fanning, "Maleficent," "Somewhere") finds he stands against everything she believes in. And for that, he must go.

A simple girl from a peasant family, the naive Catherine arrives in Russia ready to embrace her arranged marriage to the mercurial Peter. But life on the throne isn't as she envisioned it. It's backwards, depraved and dangerous and she soon finds herself imprisoned in a union with a man she can't stomach. And just when she's on the brink of suicide, her servant Marial (Phoebe Fox, "Eye in the Sky") poses another option – to overthrow him. And like that,

Catherine the Nothing will become Catherine the Great.

Created, written and executive produced by Tony McNamara ("The Favourite"), the series takes an irreverent and fictionalized approach to the story of Catherine, whose 34-year rule was so successful it was considered the Golden Age of Russia.

In her first comedic role, Fanning had to strike a balance between the pathos and the humor of her character, which was a learning curve for the actress, as she told a recent gathering of journalists in Pasadena, Calif.

"There's a very specific tone to the show as you can see and just finding that tone ..." Fanning explains. "And also I had to learn, I think, with comedy also not to feel embarrassed. I've learned so much in the process of this, of bringing my walls down and going for it a bit more. And that's kind of the key thing I've learned. Like alright, don't be embarrassed. Be Brave. Be Catherine. Pull a face, go for it, try this wacky thing. It's like on the set, that's the fun of it and the joy of it, that we get to experiment and go there and do things that you would never do on a regular film set."

As Peter, Hoult plays it over the top as a spoiled manchild who can think of things only in terms of how they affect him.

"I just love Tony's writing ...,," he says. "So when he gave me the script to this and I read the role of Peter, I mean, there's all those brilliant turns of phrase and lines of dialogue that you'd never expect to see or get anywhere else. But they're all underpinned with (these) really emotionally charged and dynamic characters. So each day going to work I kind of (look through the script) and I'm like, 'This is just a joy.' So yeah, I'm very happy to be playing him. And he's a bizarre character, but a lot of fun."

Diane Keaton's Top 10 Movies

BY JAY BOBBIN

"Something's Gotta Give" (2003): Simply put, the reteaming of Keaton and Jack Nicholson in this middle-aged romance fulfills its promise.

"The First Wives Club" (1996): Just by being herself, Keaton is a riotous element of the the trio that also includes Goldie Hawn and Bette Midler.

"Father of the Bride" (1991): One of Keaton's most conventional roles also is one of her most entertaining, as she plays the calming wife of an increasingly panicked in-law-to-be (Steve Martin) in this charming remake.

"The Good Mother" (1988): A wrenching Keaton plays a divorcee whose new romance could cost her custody of her daughter.

"Baby Boom" (1987): Keaton is ideal as a relentless workaholic whose career is impacted greatly when she inherits a late relative's infant.

"Reds" (1981): Keaton fills a vital role in ex-beau Warren Beatty's drama as Louise Bryant, the woman between journalist John Reed (Beatty) and playwright Eugene O'Neill (Nicholson).

"Looking for Mr. Goodbar" (1977): Comedy largely was Keaton's calling card when she offered this reminder of her dramatic skills by playing a promiscuous schoolteacher.

"Annie Hall" (1977): It would be hard for Keaton to get the title part wrong, since Woody Allen based it on her – and she plays herself well enough to have won an Oscar for it.

"Love and Death" (1975): The best of Keaton's early teamings with Allen finds her totally game for sending up Russian culture.

"The Godfather" (1972): Some people might not even remember Keaton was in this iconic Mob movie, but she fills the bill as a family outsider.

As a businesswoman, Diane Keaton fights to "have it all" in "Baby Boom"

BY JAY BOBBIN

Diane Keaton has been serviced well by the vast majority of her movies, but "Baby Boom" ranks high among the ones that have suited her best.

Within its main mission of being amusing, the 1987 film (which Turner Classic Movies shows Sunday, May 10) addresses many themes that remain relevant more than three decades later ... relationship commitment, professional vs. personal life, the entrepreneurial spirit, and responsibility to oneself as well as others. And in this case, the main "other" is an adorable infant named Elizabeth.

Workaholic businesswoman J.C. Wiatt (Keaton) is shocked to become the immediate – as in, "handed off during an airport layover" – guardian of the child, a relative who's just been orphaned. Able to handle everything previously, including her at-arm's-distance live-in boyfriend (Harold Ramis), J.C. is certain she can balance her very active career with surrogate motherhood.

However, her boss (Sam Wanamaker) warns her, "You can't have it all." And much sooner than later, he's proven right, with J.C. caught up in moments such as having a restaurant hostess try to mind Elizabeth during a business meeting ... and eventually, J.C. is maneuvered out of the firm she served so totally and forced to reinvent herself.

She does that successfully, though it takes a while, by moving out of fast-paced New York to relaxed and scenic Vermont – where she gets inspiration from her newly inherited child to develop a baby-food brand that she labels Country Baby. Applying her savvy to marketing it eventually makes it a hit, catching the attention of her former employers, who want to broker a deal to buy it for a very tidy sum.

But will J.C. bite? What ultimately happens shows how well Keaton fares in developing the character's full arc, thanks also to then-married screenwriters Charles Shyer (the movie's director as well) and Nancy Meyers. This can be deemed the springboard for the female-empowerment comedies Meyers would write and direct later, including "Something's Gotta Give" (for which Keaton also was her muse), "The Holiday" and "It's Complicated."

Apart from the messages "Baby Boom" folds in, there's a sweet romance pairing Keaton with a low-key and appealing Sam Shepard as a Vermont doctor she tries to resist. Of course, that lasts only so long, and the two performers are wonderful together. Add smaller but memorable turns by Pat Hingle as a business mogul and James Spader as Keaton's weasel of a co-worker, and the casting obviously is strong overall. (Also commendable: the music score by Bill Conti.)

In the end, though, it's Keaton who makes or breaks "Baby Boom." And, as proven by the fact that the picture remains just as enjoyable after 33 years, she surely makes it.

“I Know This Much Is True” a tale of mental illness, family and forgiveness

BY GEORGE DICKIE

Dominick Birdsey is a man with a mountain of baggage. As played by Mark Ruffalo (“The Normal Heart,” “Foxcatcher”) in the HBO limited series “I Know This Much Is True,” a six-episode drama premiering Sunday, May 10, he’s a house painter in rural Connecticut circa 1990 who is coping with his own psychic wounds as he cares for an identical twin brother with paranoid schizophrenia. And that malady rears itself in the series’ opening frames, when Thomas (also Ruffalo) hacks off his hand to the horror of onlookers in a public library in what in his mind is a sacrifice to stop the Gulf War. He’s soon sent to an asylum, where his brother fights to get him freed. Dominick isn’t all that well, either. He’s buckling under the weight of PTSD, the result of looking after Thomas, a childhood with an abusive stepfather, memories of losing his infant daughter to SIDS and subsequent divorce from Dessa (Kathryn Hahn, “Transparent”) and making sure his dying mother (Melissa Leo, “Frozen River”) has proper hospice care.

As Dominick contends with an asylum social worker (Rosie O’Donnell) to gain his brother’s release, a psychologist (Archie Panjabi, “The Good Wife”) picks up on his considerable emotional pain and realizes she may have two patients instead of one.

For the dual roles, Ruffalo undertook unusual demands. First, he shot all his scenes as the svelte, goateed Dominick, then took five weeks off to gain 30 pounds to play the doughy, clean-shaven Thomas. It was also during this time that the 52-year-old actor researched mental illness and imagined himself as someone with Thomas’ condition. “When we were talking about how we would do it,” Ruffalo explained to a recent gathering of journalists in Pasadena, Calif., “we didn’t want it to be like I run and put a wig on, and then run and do the same scene on the same day. So, yeah, we took five weeks off to really separate these two guys. “And Thomas was on a lot of medication,” he continues. “He needs medications. These mood stabilizers and antipsychotics cause people to put on weight. And, yeah

... their life experiences after their teens are so extremely different. But it was important for us to really, really have these guys be two different people.” And each came with its own distinct challenges, Ruffalo says, but Thomas’ were especially daunting.

“Birds Of Prey (And the Fantabulous Emancipation of One Harley Quinn)”

In the same manner as “Suicide Squad,” this adventure goes its own way in using the DC Comics universe as a springboard – and also like that film, it makes Harley Quinn a pivotal character, as played again by Margot Robbie (also a producer this time). The lively, self-styled Harley has consciously uncoupled from The Joker, making her a supposedly easier target for enemies. She knows she’ll need some help to stay alive, so she enlists such allies as Black Canary and The Huntress (Jurnee Smollett-Bell, Mary Elizabeth Winstead), and it doesn’t take long for the mayhem between groups and genders to start flying. A parade of frantic and sometimes quite graphic action, this also incorporates some stabs at wit, which you’d have to expect from Robbie playing Harley again – but the picture largely wants to play it safe while showing that women can be tough, too, something the Marvel movies started doing some time ago. Some other good performers put their best feet and fists forward here, including Rosie Perez, Ewan McGregor and Chris Messina. DVD extras: seven “making-of” documentaries; outtakes. »» (R: AS, P, V) (Also on Blu-ray, 4L Ultra HD and On Demand)

“The Call of the Wild”

One of the most enjoyable things about Harrison Ford these days is to watch him act his age, literally, and he does that again with a project that’s ideal for him on that count. This latest screen version of the classic Jack London story services Ford better than his canine co-star ... who isn’t actually a real dog. The animal named Buck is computer-generated in this case, but admittedly, this would take a pretty obedient and trainable dog since much of the action falls on Buck as he goes through encounters with various people. By far, the most memorable is his adventure with Ford, as a prospector haunted by family troubles; the pain the veteran star conveys is quite human, neatly balancing a partner who isn’t even real. This also is a picture built for atmosphere, and it’s very lucky to have the brilliant Oscar winner Janusz Kaminski – who works frequently with Steven Spielberg – as its cinematographer. Thanks largely to him, the result has an expectedly handsome look that a famous saga like this deserves. Dan Stevens (“Downton Abbey”), Omar Sy, Karen Gillan and Bradley Whitford also appear, but Ford clearly takes the acting honors. »» (PG: AS, P, V) (Also on Blu-ray, 4K Ultra HD and On Demand)

“Fantasy Island”

The popular television show of the late 1970s and early 1980s inspired a series reboot, and it’s also the source of this feature-film update, which takes a considerably darker tone than the original version – though that, too, was known for putting unexpected twists on the fantasies that “guests” hoped to live out for real during their stays. Michael Pena plays this edition’s Mr. Roarke, the island host who gets his own fantasy in the course of helping others fulfill theirs, with Lucy Hale (“Katy Keene”), Maggie Q (“Designated Survivor”) and Austin Stowell as the principal visitors who come to regret what they wished for. Michael Rooker and Portia Doubleday (“Mr. Robot”) also are featured. DVD extras: audio commentary by director Jeff Wadlow and cast members; deleted scenes. »» (PG-13 and unrated versions: AS, P, V) (Also on Blu-ray and On Demand)

“The Photograph”

Appropriately released last Valentine’s Day, this romantic drama gives a deeply dramatic role to Issa Rae, known primarily these days for her comedic work on the HBO series “Insecure.” Also an executive producer here, she plays the daughter of a recently deceased woman (Chante Adams) whose life unfolds in large part as a series of flashbacks involving the relationship that the elder woman – the subject of the photograph that the title refers to – had with a man (Rob Morgan) who also comes to play a big role in the daughter’s life. Writer-director Stella Meghie plays liberally with the story’s timeline, regularly jumping back and forth to establish parallel experiences of the two women. Lakeith Stanfield (“Atlanta”), Chelsea Peretti (“Brooklyn Nine-Nine”), Lil Rel Howery and Courtney B. Vance also star. DVD extras: three “making-of” documentaries. »» (PG-13: AS, P) (Also on Blu-ray and On Demand)

“Shameless: The Complete Tenth Season”

What turned out to be the penultimate season of the seriocomic Showtime series is without Emmy Rossum, who wrapped up her run as Fiona the previous year, but the rest of the Chicago-based Gallagher clan is present and accounted for ... certainly including patriarch Frank (William H. Macy), who remains his irascible self, though an unexpected reunion could temper him to a certain degree. While Debbie (Emma Kenney) oversees the household, Lip (Jeremy Allen White) attempts to adjust to parenthood, and Carl (Ethan Cutkosky) tries to determine what’s in store for him post-military school. Shanola Hampton, Steve Howey and Cameron Monaghan also remain as cast regulars, and Luis Guzman (“Code Black”) has a major guest role. The show’s concluding season is expected to premiere later this year. DVD extras: deleted scenes. »» (Not rated: AS, P, V)
